

5 Questions

TO ASK YOUR CANDIDATES ABOUT THE ENVIRONMENT

Elections matter. Your vote matters. If continued protections for clean air and water and healthy communities are important to you, know the issues and where each candidate stands. To get you started, we compiled a list of questions to consider when researching candidates for office, attending town halls, or more.

1. Is cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay and its rivers and streams important to you?
2. What current policies and programs to clean up the Bay and its rivers and streams should be continued or enhanced? Should any be changed or dropped?
3. How will you hold polluters accountable to ensure communities have clean air and water?
4. What is your plan to help protect people, our economy, and critical natural ecosystems in the face of climate change?
5. How will you ensure all communities—particularly communities that bear the brunt of pollution and the impacts of pollution and climate change—receive equitable access to clean air and water and response to environmental disasters?

The Chesapeake Bay Foundation is a 501(c)(3) tax exempt, not-for-profit, charitable organization. As such we may not, and we do not coordinate with, support, or oppose any candidates for public office or political party.
